Introduction

"Your success is determined by your daily agenda." -John Maxwell

Great achievers have always performed well by managing themselves and their abilities. Self-management is important for individuals to perform effectively in both large and small organizations where they are called to perform various duties. Self-management encourages individuals to set their own goals, monitor their behavior in achieving those goals, and reward themselves upon their success in achieving those goals. Self-management is the building block for the effective management of other people, groups, and organizations.

The purpose of this conference is to:

- Encourage individuals at all levels to develop skills and strategies to direct their own behavior toward achieving their goals
- Accept responsibility for the success or failure of tasks that you we undertaken
- Schedule personal time off to create positive deadlines to complete projects
