Introduction:

Single-source procurement is the noncompetitive purchase of goods or services that takes place after negotiating with only one supplier. The award of single-source or non-competitive contracts in the defence sector has garnered an increasing level of critical attention in the last few years. In an era of austerity and public spending cuts, many have turned their attention to how governments can do more with less. Full and open competition is one tool for governments to help ensure best value for money, yet previous studies highlight that the defence sector is poor in this respect
