Introduction

"Legal or Legislative Drafting" primarily deals with the composition of binding legal texts, including laws, regulations, executive orders, contracts, deeds, and more. Drafting does not necessitate citing legal authorities and generally should not carry any personal bias.

The linguistic style used in all legal documents rarely changes. Linguistic style refers to the linguistic characteristics and structures used in writing legal documents. Legal drafters almost universally employ the same linguistic features and characteristics. While the format may vary from one document to another, legal documents generally adhere to the same linguistic style.
