Introduction

Managing our own energy is critical to ongoing career success. Our energy levels fluctuate during the day and have an impact on performance. Participants will learn about Personal Energy Management and how it helps individuals and teams to work more efficiently in a sustainable way.

The training course also goes into detail on different energy needs. It demonstrates how motivation is linked to our energy levels and how it impacts us physically and mentally.

Some people are very good at organizing and planning their schedules and time, but if our personal energy is not managed, we might not really get things done. It is important to be fully present during meetings and important conversations, but with low energy levels our brains become foggy and our bodies tired. This training course will help you to combine these two aspects to gain optimal performance, work more effectively with others and become happier!
