Introduction

In today's world, many individuals carry complex trauma histories that deeply impact their emotional, psychological, and physical well-being. Complex trauma, often stemming from prolonged exposure to severe stressors such as abuse, neglect, or violence, can profoundly affect an individual's ability to trust, form relationships, and navigate daily life. As trainers, it is crucial to possess the knowledge, skills, and sensitivity necessary to support individuals with complex trauma histories on their journey towards healing and resilience.

The "Facilitating Healing" training program is designed to equip trainers with the specialized tools and insights required to effectively work with individuals who have experienced complex trauma. Grounded in trauma-informed principles and therapeutic techniques, this program aims to empower trainers to create safe, supportive environments where healing can flourish.
