Introduction

The globalization of political, social, economic, legal, cultural, and technological contexts has fueled the need to modernize public services. With the increasing demands of citizens for better quality and efficiency and increased convenience, modernization is no longer an option but has become a necessity. If a country needs to remain competitive in the global market, so it cannot rely on traditional means.

The users of public services are increasingly becoming tech-savvy and need more convenience and efficiency in the usage of these services; hence, up-gradation and appropriate use of information technology is extremely necessary for the public sector to support its customers in the best way possible.

Modernization of public services acts in many ways but mainly results in grown efficiency, increased unsophistication, greater consistency in quality of service, and better public fund management. Modernization also helps increase interaction between the government and citizens and thus helps plan public sector reforms in line with the expectations of users

Introducing the concept of e-Governance is synonymous with building an information society, which has two pillars technological innovation and global networking. While technology is at the crux of modernization, technological innovation and advancement alone will not lead to successful modernization.

Unification and equalization of legal norms and legislations, upskilling of public sector professionals, gaining economic independence, and improving international connections are some of the contributors to modernizing the public services. Modernization requires reform at all stages, be it fundamental changes in the methods of work of the government, in behaviors and work ethic or value systems within the organization Decentralization is also an important factor of modernization in the public sector.

This Global Horizon training course will empower you with in-depth knowledge of the need for modernization of the public services and the necessary steps to successfully introduce modernization in the public sector.

This Certificate in Public Service Management course will cover e-Governance in detail, which is the need across any domain these days. This, in turn, will ensure that you are competing not just to work in your role within your organization, but are competent enough to think and work across any domain in any of the sectors—public, mixed, or private.

The knowledge and experience gained through this course will help you set up your organization for success, thus securing your future in a promising organization, and contribute to society by playing an important role in providing better, faster, and more convenient services to the public.
