Introduction:

In today's world, tourism has become a powerful tool for fostering economic and social growth, with heritage cities and archaeological sites playing a central role in attracting tourists. However, this type of tourism poses significant challenges related to the preservation of cultural and archaeological heritage. Many heritage sites around the world are under excessive pressure due to the large increase in tourist numbers, leading to tangible threats to these sites on both environmental and cultural levels. This raises the need to develop sustainable marketing strategies aimed at attracting tourists while preserving these sites for future generations.

This training program seeks to equip participants with the tools and skills necessary to develop marketing plans that contribute to promoting sustainable tourism in heritage cities, with a focus on protecting historical and archaeological landmarks. Modern marketing techniques will be reviewed, integrated with environmental and cultural sustainability concepts to ensure a balance between attracting tourists and preserving heritage sites.

The program will focus on real-world examples, allowing participants to understand the challenges and opportunities available to them. A range of actionable strategies will be presented to help them achieve success in their fields while safeguarding cultural heritage.
